Peter Friedmann to speak at May 9th Luncheon at C I Shennanigans

Peter spoke at the club last year and the feedback was so positive, that we invited him to come back this year. Don't miss this great speaking engagement. It promises to be very informational.

Peter Friedman plays a key role in developing U.S. and International Ocean and waterborne transportation.

He serves as Executive Director of the Agriculture Transportation Coalition, the organization which the Journal of Commerce has identified as the "principle voice of the agriculture exporters in US transportation policy." The AgTC is the means by which agriculture exporters and importers pursue favorable transportation policy in truck, rail, port and ocean carrier practices. The AgTC pursues specific steps to provide a dependable and affordable transportation network to keep us agriculture exports competitive in the global marketplace.

Consistent with representation of agriculture shippers' interest, Peter serves as Counsel to organizations such as the Pacific Coast Council of Customs Brokers and Freight Forwarders, and the Coalition of New England Companies for Trade, and represents US port authorities, all with an interest in maritime commerce. On behalf of multinational corporations, he assists in negotiations of ocean transportation contracts. He is often cited as a leading authority in transportation policy in Washington DC.

As Counsel for the U.S. Senate Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation, Peter was responsible for drafting the Ocean Shipping Act advocating shipper interests for contracting rights in the Ocean Shipping Reform Act, and has drafted numerous other transportation laws, including Jones Act amendments, and the funding mechanisms by which ports and inland waterways are dredged and operated—the Harbor Maintenance Fee. Since leaving Capitol Hill, Peter has been a leading advocate for shipper and international trade interests before Congress and the Federal Maritime Commission.

News and Updates

Ocean Vessels and Large Ships

Large ships such as container ships, tankers, bulk carriers, cruise ships, and Lakers are significant contributors to air pollution in many of our nation's cities and ports. There are two types of diesel engines used on large ships: main propulsion and auxiliary engines. The International Maritime Organization (IMO) facilitates development of standards to control air exhaust emissions from the engines that power ships. The IMO is the United Nations agency concerned with maritime safety and security and the prevention of marine pollution from ships.

On March 26, 2010, the IMO officially designated waters off North American coasts as an area in which stringent international emission standards will apply to ships. These standards will dramatically reduce air pollution from ships and deliver substantial air quality and public health benefits that extend hundreds of miles inland.

In practice, implementation of the ECA (Emission Control Area) means that ships entering the designated area would need to use compliant fuel for the duration of their voyage that is within that area, including time in port as well as voyages whose routes pass through the area without calling on a port. The quality of fuel that complies with the ECA standard will change over time. From the effective date in 2012 until 2015, fuel used by all vessels operating in designated areas cannot exceed 1.0 percent sulfur (10,000 ppm). In most cases, ships already have the capability to store two or more fuels. However, to meet the 2015 requirement of 1,000 ppm fuel sulfur, some vessels may need to be modified for additional distillate fuel storage capacity. As an alternative to using lower sulfur fuel, ship operators may choose to equip their vessels with exhaust gas cleaning devices ("scrubbers"). In this case, the scrubber extracts sulfur from the exhaust.

You can access the U.S. proposal and related documents on EPA's Office of Transportation and Air Quality Web site at: www.epa.gov/otaq/oceanvessels.htm
